Black = confirmed. Amber italic = still an open decision.

Why so much of this is still open

Several of these are blocking dependencies on each other, not independent choices. The valuation cap can't really be finalized until there's a clearer signal from real investor conversations about what the market will bear. The use-of-funds breakdown depends partly on the founder full-time timeline decision, which is itself still open. And the SAFE can't actually be executed with anyone until incorporation is complete, so a target close date isn't meaningful yet either. This document exists to make those dependencies visible in one place, not to pretend they're resolved.

What's actually locked

The instrument choice is the one real decision made so far: a post-money SAFE with a valuation cap, no discount, using Y Combinator's standard form. That was chosen over a convertible note or a priced round specifically because it's the fastest, least legally complex path for a two-founder pre-seed raise, and because prospective investors will recognize the form immediately rather than needing to review custom terms.

This is an internal working document, not something to share externally as-is. It has not been reviewed by an attorney or a financial advisor. Update it as each open item gets decided, and treat the amber rows as the actual punch list before this round can close.
